Wazzup

Wazzup with UT Vols fans clearing out of the stadium before the game is over the minute they know the team is losing? Aren't we supposed to support our teams when they're down as well as when they're up? 'Bout the only thing worse when it comes to supporting a group of persons is the way parents clear out of school auditoriums the minute their own kid's performance is over. Perhaps both instances are just another sign of the times.....

eral (OIG) announced that Shauntaye Mayo, 30, of Alabama pleaded guilty to three counts of TennCare fraud, one count of theft of services and one count of food stamp fraud. She has been ordered to repay TennCare $23,430 and to repay $14,529 to DHS. She also received six (6) years judicial diversion as a part of the sentencing.

Mayo was indicted in June of 2011 on felony theft of services and four counts of TennCare fraud.

In addition, Shauntaye's mother, Johnetta Mayo and her mother's sister, Leona Mayo, who was a DHS employee, were each charged with TennCare fraud for helping Shauntaye get enrolled in TennCare and the food stamp program, by making false statements and concealing certain facts that would have made her ineligible for both programs. District Attorney Victor S. Johnson, III prosecuted the case.

"We hope individuals with stealing on their mind get the message that the Office of Inspector General is serious about prosecuting TennCare fraud, especially those who are not residents of Tennessee," Inspector General Deborah Faulkner said. "We will aggressively investigate these cases in order to stop this criminal activity and recover money owed to the state."

Blount Co. Woman Loses TennCare After Fraud Conviction

A Blount County woman has been sentenced after pleading guilty to TennCare fraud, and a court ordered her to be removed from the state's healthcare insurance program.

Renee Annette Moore,

43, of Maryville, pleaded guilty to one count of felony TennCare fraud and four counts of prescription fraud.

Moore was accused of posing as an employee of a doctor's office and calling in prescriptions to a pharmacy in Alcoa to obtain the addictive pain-killer Hydrocodone. She used TennCare benefits to pay for the prescription.

"Anyone suspected of committing TennCare fraud will be investigated," Inspector General Deborah Y. Faulkner said. "The risk is arrest leading to jail time, court fines, repaying the state for benefits received, and even losing the chance for future TennCare benefits."

The court ordered Moore to be removed from TennCare enrollment for the crime. She was granted Judicial Diversion for four years and four years of supervised probation, along with paying $4,000 in court fines. Judicial Diversion is a program for first-time offenders which provides no jail time and expunging the record of the offense. It's available only for people with no class A misdemeanors or felonies who have never received a diversion or had a criminal record expunged.
