Day O'Connor and Ruth Bader Ginsburg Went to the Supreme Court and Changed the World by Linda Hirshman at noon on Wednesday, May 18 in the East Tennessee History Center auditorium, 601 South Gay Street, in this month's Books Sandwiched In, a program series sponsored by the Friends of Knox County Public Library.

"It is amazing that two women from two totally different backgrounds were able to combine their efforts and talents to improve the lives of American women in so many ways," Reeves said. "This book tells their stories in a very readable manner."

The two women on the U.S. Supreme Court could not seem more different: Republican and Democrat, Christian and Jew, western rancher's daughter and Brooklyn girl. However, their relationship transcends party, religion, region, and culture. Sandra Day O'Connor and Ruth Bader Ginsburg—strengthened by each other's presence on the Court—have transformed the Constitution and America itself, making it a more equal place for all women. Hirshman tells stories of how these pioneers fought for their own recognition in a male-dominated profession and lays out plainly how these women have shaped the legal framework of modern feminism, including employment discrimination, abortion, affirmative action, sexual harassment, and many other issues crucial to women's lives.

"I had always been a huge fan of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. After reading this book, I now have a great deal more appreciation and respect for Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg," Reeves said.

Reeves was sworn in on March 10, 2014, as the first female District Judge in the Eastern District of Tennessee.

She was nominated by President Barack Obama and confirmed by the Senate on a vote of 99-0. Reeves received her B.A. and J.D. from the University of Tennessee. Prior to her appointment to the federal bench, she practiced law and mediated cases in Knoxville with the law firm of Reeves, Herbert & Anderson, P.A. Reeves has been active in many bar and community leadership positions throughout her career, with service as President of the Tennessee Bar Association, President of the American College of Civil Trial Mediators, and Chair of the Knox County Election Commission. For 15 years, she wrote a monthly column on legal issues for the Knoxville News Sentinel.

The series will continue on June 22 when Dr. Annette Mendola, Chief, Division of Clinical Ethics, will discuss Being Mortal: Medicine and What Matters in the End by Atul Gawande. On July 27, Dr. Margaret Lazarus Dean, UT Department of English, will discuss her book Leaving Orbit: Notes from the Last Days of American Spaceflight.

Schools

cally active and attending physical education class based on a 2013 national survey of high school students' health-related behaviors.

Approximately 25 percent of Tennessee high school students indicated they were physically active for one hour per day; the national rate was 27.1 percent. The national rate for high school students who attended physical education class at least once per week was 48 percent; Tennessee's rate was 40.1 percent.

The Comptroller's infographics also explain the differences between physical activity and physical education.

Physical activity includes activities such as recess or walking. Tennessee law currently requires that elementary and secondary students receive at least 90 minutes per week of physical activity, but beginning on July 1, 2016, state law will begin requiring the equivalent of 225 minutes per week for grades K-1 and 160 minutes for grades 2-6. The current requirement for grades 7-12 of 90 minutes per week will remain unchanged. Schools are prohibited by law from counting walking between classes toward meeting the physical activity requirement.

Unlike physical activity, which includes free play during recess, physical education is a standards-based program of instruction. Tennessee schools must provide P.E. programs annually, though a minimum number of minutes or days per week is not currently required.

The nationally recommended amount of physical education for high school students is 225 minutes per week. No states currently meet the recommended amount, though some specify a minimum number of minutes per week.

Tennessee students must obtain a one-half credit of physical education in order to graduate from high school.

The three infographics are available on the Comptroller's website at <http://www.comptroller.tn.gov/orea/Index>
