theft

Sandra Harrison, 48, Kerr Street Lenoir City, was charged with Theft of Property and Criminal Trespass.

Deputy Chris Jenkins LCSO, responded to said location on Highland Ave. to possible theft of property. Deputy arrived on scene and spoke to the victim. The victim stated that he had several thefts of packages from his front porch on different occasions and did make reports. The victim stated that he had set up a video camera system and during said dates and times a female came to his property and was on the cameras video. The victim possibly identified the female as a female that previously came to the residence and purchased a stove and advised she possibly lived up the street on Highland. The female identified as Sandra Harrison did take the package but the package had nothing in it and was placed as a dummy box to attempt to catch the person taking the packages. Sandra Harrison was arrested for these charges. This did happen in Loudon Co., Tn.

Haslam system.

Joined by Department of Transportation (TDOT) Commissioner John Schroer, Haslam also released two transportation projects lists: a list of 181 backlogged projects that will not be completed or at least under contract until 2034; and a list of 765 new project needs that cannot be considered until 2022 at the earliest, if ever.

A 2015 Tennessee Comptroller's report on transportation funding states that revenues are not expected to be sufficient to maintain current infrastructure. Cars and trucks are more fuel-efficient, construction and labor costs have risen, and Congress has not passed a long-term transportation funding bill in 10 years. Tennessee's population is expected to grow by 2 million by 2040, which puts a greater demand on the state's infrastructure.

"Today is about starting a thoughtful discussion on what Tennesseans want from their transportation system today and for their children and grandchildren. Transportation affects every Tennessean. From the business moving product to the parents trying to make it home before their kids go to bed, everyone has a stake in this discussion," Haslam said. "The last time Tennessee passed a roads plan was 1986, so if history is any indication, it could be another 30 years before the state has another plan.

"Tennessee has a debt-free system that is the third highest ranked in the country and spends the third least per capita," he added. "But looking ahead five years, there are very real challenges that will affect the conditions of our roads and bridges, our ability to recruit the jobs we want in Tennessee, and our quality of life."

The backlog projects have been approved by the General Assembly but lack available funding to move forward. In August and September, Haslam and Schroer visited 15 cities hearing from local officials about transportation challenges in their area, and the new projects needs list reflects what Haslam and Schroer heard during those conversations as well as other projects TDOT has identified to address growth and safety issues.

The projects Haslam

and Schroer highlighted today are:

Alcoa Highway in Blount County - $271.7 million (backlog list);

State Route 126 in Kingsport - $98.7 million (backlog and new lists);

I-24/I-75 Interchange in Hamilton County - $65 million (new list);

Lamar Avenue in Memphis - $229.1 million (backlog list); and I-40 in Lebanon - $61.6 million (new list).

"Each of these projects is vitally important to these communities, whether the issue is safety, congestion, or enhancing economic development opportunities," Schroer said. "The stark reality is that it could be nearly two decades before we're able to pay for these needed improvements, and further delays will only have negative impacts on Tennesseans."

gang member from Chicago wanted for the murder of a 15-year-old boy in 2009. Macedo led a group of gang members who beat the victim with a baseball bat, shot him, and then set his body on fire.

Twenty-one years old when the murder occurred, Macedo had already been an active gang member since he was a young teen and was in charge of the street crew that set upon the 15-year-old, who was not a rival gang member but was in the neighborhood visiting his girlfriend.

"The murder was classic mob mentality," said Patrick Johnson, a Chicago Police Department detective who is a member of the FBI's Violent Crimes Task Force in Chicago and who has been working to locate Macedo.

In the weeks after the killing, Macedo and four of his accomplices were identified. The other four gang members were arrested and were either convicted at trial or pleaded guilty to the crime and are serving prison sentences. Macedo remains a fugitive.

"Over the years, we've had unconfirmed reports about him being in Florida and possibly in Mexico," Johnson said. "He also has family in Wisconsin and Indiana, but the trail has gone cold. We are hoping this substantial reward announced today will bring someone forward."

Special Agent Scott Garriola, a member of the FBI's Los Angeles Fugitives Task Force who has investigated numerous Top Ten cases, believes the reward—up to $100,000 for information leading directly to an arrest—may also play a significant role in the Philip Patrick Policarpio case. "The money can be a strong motivating factor," he said, "and why would anyone want to protect him, considering what he did."
