Report from Thailand

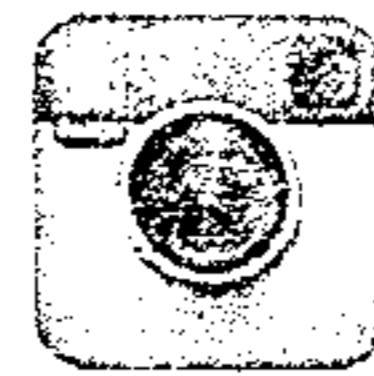

Part 1: Confronting the Child Sex Trade in Southeast Asia

Thailand has long been a popular tourist destination for Westerners charmed by the country's culture and cuisine, its storied beaches, and its ever-present markets. Unfortunately, a certain type of visitor is also drawn to the well-established sex trade, which too often victimizes children.

The dark side of Thailand's tourism industry plays out nightly in Bangkok's tawdry red-light districts, in Chiang Mai's after-hours club scene, and along the neon-infested Walking Street in the coastal town of Pattaya. In these and other places less obvious, trafficked children can be bought and sold, reduced to the basest form of commerce.

Awareness

On August 2, 2016, the U.S. Attorney's Office sponsored an Education and Prevention Summit to Combat Opioid Addiction in East Tennessee at the Bijou Theater in downtown Knoxville. Participants included representatives from the Appalachia High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area, Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), Knoxville City Mayor's Office, Knox County Medical Examiner, Knoxville Police Department, Knox County District Attorney's Office, Metro Drug Coalition, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation (FBI), and TBI Tennessee Dangerous Drug Task Force. The diverse group of attendees included medical professionals, pharmacists, health insurance providers, local, state and federal law enforcement and prosecutors, service providers, educational professionals and other local, state and federal officials.

In addition to panel discussions on the opioid addiction problems in east Tennessee and the law enforcement legislative and prosecutorial efforts to combat this growing problem, the summit highlighted the recent documentary Chasing the Dragon: The Life of an Opiate Addict, which was produced by the FBI and DEA to help educate students and young adults about the dangers of opioid addiction. The 45-minute film, whose title refers to the never-ending pursuit of the original or ultimate high, features stark first-person accounts told by individuals who have abused opioids or whose children have abused opioids, with tragic consequences.

By viewing the documentary and participating in the after-discussions, attendees of the east Tennessee summit now have the knowledge and ability to act as messengers within the entire district to promote the documentary to school officials and suggest joint events for students, parents and educators at which it is featured and discussed.

To further encourage this effort, the documentary was also shared with local, state and federal law enforcement at the recent 2016 Intelligence Analysis Sharing: A Candid Look at Community Policing and DOJ Smart on Crime Initiative for the Eastern District of Tennessee, held in Gatlinburg, August 8-9, 2016. Additionally, staff members of the U.S. Attorney's Office were invited to bring their families for an airing and discussion of the documentary during an upcoming district-wide office training event.

The video, Chasing the Dragon: The Life of an Opiate Addict, can be found on either the FBI or DEA websites using the following links: <https://www.fbi.gov/news/stories/raising-awareness-of-opioid-addiction> or <https://www.dea.gov/media/chasing-dragon.shtml>.

During recently held discussions, law enforcement representatives across the district agreed that the rise of heroin use and the abuse of prescription opioids in the United States is currently our biggest challenge to public health and safety. It threatens communities, families, and children. Talking points provided by the Department of Justice, which are attached to this release, provide additional confirmation of the heroin, fentanyl, and prescription drug problems in the United States.

Now is the time for the public, law enforcement, medical professionals, law enforcement and service providers and other community leaders to work together to halt this growing epidemic. Only through action can awareness of the dangers posed by the consumption of prescription opioids, and a growing trend of heroin and fentanyl use be raised.

U.S. Attorney Nancy Stallard Harr is committed to holding those responsible who are poisoning our communities with these highly addictive drugs. "The U.S. Attorney's Office will continue to work together with law enforcement to prosecute federal offenses relating to the unlawful distribution of heroin, fentanyl, and prescription opioids," stated U.S. Attorney Harr. She further added, "We will also work with local, state and federal leaders to help educate the public regarding the dangers involved with the improper use and abuse of these powerful substances."

About This Series

The FBI and other U.S. federal agencies are working closely with the government of Thailand and the Royal Thai Police to fight the scourge of human trafficking and the child sex trade in Southeast Asia. FBI.gov chronicles the efforts in a four-part series called Report from Thailand.

Part 1: Confronting the Child Sex Trade in Southeast Asia

Part 2: A New Emphasis on Helping Child Victims

Increasingly, the Thai government—with the assistance of the FBI and other partners—has taken significant steps to address the sexual exploitation of children and to focus more attention on victims, whose interests in the past have sometimes been overlooked.

“The Thai government has adopted a new urgency when it comes to the issues of child exploitation, sexual abuse, and trafficking in persons,” noted U.S. Ambassador to Thailand Glyn T. Davies. “This new urgency is very welcome.”

Davies explained that trafficking is a “huge problem in Thailand, as it is in many countries.” But the Thai government has shown a “new eagerness” to address the problem and to seek help from the United States, the ambassador said. “That is terrific, because we’ve got the FBI, the Department of Homeland Security, and the State Department’s expertise and resources that we can bring to bear.”

Among recent promising developments:

U.S. Ambassador to Thailand Glyn Davies describes a “new energy” and interest by the Thai government in addressing child sex trafficking through increased partnerships and collaboration.

The Thai government opened a Child Advocacy Center in Chiang Mai, the first of its kind anywhere in Southeast Asia. Based on U.S. models, the center provides shelter and resources for young victims of sexual exploitation and other abuse, and allows specially trained experts to conduct interviews with the children in a friendly, stress-free environment.

A law enacted in 2015 has made it easier to arrest and prosecute pedophiles and other sexual abusers who are in possession of child pornography.

The establishment of the Thailand Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force (TICAC). Based on a U.S. model, the task force combats sexual exploitation facilitated online through shared intelligence. Thai law enforcement officials have recently begun working directly with the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children in the U.S. to share real-time information.

With training and support from the FBI and Homeland Security Investigations (HSI), an investigative arm of the Department of Homeland Security, the Royal Thai Police is in the process of establishing a victim assistance program—similar to the FBI's Office for Victim Assistance—in which trained police specialists work on behalf of child victims.

More than one million children are exploited each year in the global commercial sex trade.

U.S. Department of State

Many of these efforts to stem the tide of human trafficking and child sexual exploitation in Thailand have occurred because of the continuing collaboration between Thai law enforcement and U.S. agencies working in Southeast Asia—notably the FBI, HSI, and the U.S. Department of State.

"American law enforcement has been long-time good friends to the Royal Thai Police," said Gen. Tamesak Wichara-ya, an assistant commissioner on the police force who oversees the TICAC and has been instrumental in moving the victim assistance program forward. "Trafficking is a serious crime," he said. "It is a crime against human dignity, but when they do this to our children, it is even worse." The general explained that there is a "clear national agenda" in Thailand to address these issues and to assist young people who are sexually exploited by Thai citizens as well as foreign visitors.

"We see a large number of travelers from the U.S. and other countries coming here to commit acts against children," said Special Agent John Schachnovsky, head of the FBI's legal attaché office in Bangkok. "To travel from the U.S. to any foreign country and engage in sex with a minor is against the law."

Schachnovsky pointed out that providing assistance to victims—as the FBI has formally done since 2001—is not only the right thing to do morally, it helps law enforcement more effectively investigate cases. That, in turn, increases the likelihood abusers will be jailed and will cease to pose a threat to the community.

"For victims of crime to know that the police force is on their side from day one is very important," he said. "The world knows that the sexual exploitation of children is a problem. There aren't two sides to the issue of taking care of victims. This is a situation where we are able to do something that is 100 percent right."

The more child sex tourists and traffickers who are sent to Thai prisons or returned to the U.S. for prosecution, said Gen. Tamesak, the more the word goes out that Thailand is no longer a playground for pedophiles and other sexual predators. "We hope that we can send a clear message to those people that Thailand is not a safe haven for them. We will work harder to stop these kinds of people."

Ambassador Davies agreed. Given the changes taking place from the top down in the Thai government and in law enforcement, he said, "I think people are making a big mistake if they think they can come here and operate freely when it comes to these types of heinous crimes."

John Schachnovsky, head of the FBI office in Thailand, describes how the Royal Thai Police has moved quickly to embrace a more victim-centered approach.

Child Sex Tourism
Child sex tourism describes the act of traveling to another country to engage in illegal sexual conduct with children. It's a growing problem thanks to the ease of international travel and the free exchange of information online regarding how and where to find child victims overseas. Children from poor and developing countries are often seen as easy targets by American sexual predators.

The U.S. Department of State estimates that more than a million children are exploited each year in the global commercial sex trade—and that exploitation is illegal. American citizens who engage in sexual contact with a minor overseas are subject to prosecution under various U.S. laws, and those laws were strengthened in 2003 with the passage of the federal PROTECT Act. The law enhances the ability to prosecute and incarcerate individuals who victimize children and removes any statute of limitation on crimes involving the abduction or physical or sexual abuse of a child.
