DUI

Steven Fuller, 20, Huntsman Circle Franklin, was charged with DUI.

Deputy JC Schultz LCSO, answered a reckless driver call on I-75 at the 81 mile marker southbound. This Deputy observed a red Mazda 6 swerving from the fast lane to the fog line of the slow lane. This Deputy activated emergency equipment and performed a traffic stop at the 77 mile marker. Upon stopping, this vehicle almost struck a guardrail. The driver had a strong odor of alcohol coming from his person, and had glossy red bloodshot eyes. The driver was identified as Mr. Steven Ryan Fuller, a underage student. Mr. Fuller stated that he was in route to Nashville from a UT game and was acting confused. Mr Fuller was asked to exit his vehicle, and he was unsteady on his feet. Mr Fuller was asked to perform field sobriety. He performed poorly. Mr Fuller stated that he had smoked marijuana previously, took a unknown pill, and had drank three shots today. Mr. Fuller was read implied consent, which he agreed to. He was then transported to Fort Loudon Emergency where blood was drawn and then to the Loudon County Jail by this Deputy. This did occur in Loudon County, Tn.

squatter ctd. from pg. 2 rooms.

It was unknown if anything else had been taken at this time. There were two windows in the back of the house that were broken possibly in an attempt to gain entry. Entry to the residence was possibly made through the front door using an old skeleton key, several of which were also found on the property, and did not belong to victim. Later this date, a location for Mr. Moser was found.

Deputy was sent to the residence to attempt to locate. Upon arrival at the residence, possibly Corinth Road, Loudon TN 37774, Mr. Moser ran out the back of that residence. He was apprehended after a track by Deputy Chris Jenkins and transported to the Loudon County Jail on an investigative hold for Lt. Upton.

This did occur in Loudon County. Lt. Patrick Upon LCSO, issued warrants on Moser after an investigation by LCSO CID.

FBI

After a 45-year partnership with the U.S. Army, the FBI yesterday formally accepted primary responsibility for the Hazardous Devices School at Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Alabama, the facility that trains and certifies every one of the nation's public safety bomb technicians.

The transition of responsibility ceremony, which occurred less than a week after homemade bombs exploded in New York and New Jersey, injuring 29 people, underscores the critical role the Hazardous Devices School (HDS) plays in the country's national security. Some of the unexploded devices in last weekend's incident were rendered safe by local bomb techs who received their training at the HDS.

"The bombing events in New York and New Jersey are a testament to the challenges faced by bomb technicians daily—and an unfortunate reminder of a threat that is both evolving and enduring," noted FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, who was on hand at Redstone Arsenal for the transition ceremony along with other Bureau and Army officials.

McCabe explained that the FBI has an obligation to provide "the best possible tools and training" to local, state, and federal bomb technicians and that the Bureau plans to significantly expand and upgrade the HDS facility over the next several years. The expansion will include state of the art facilities and equipment, he said, to ensure that the HDS "remains the nation's single source of certified training for bomb technicians."

Established in 1971, the HDS has provided training to more than 20,000 local, state, and federal first responders and bomb techs. Currently the school trains and certifies approximately 200 new bomb techs each year from the 467 public safety bomb squads around the country, according to the school's director, Special Agent Jeff Warren. The basic certification course provides six weeks of instruction, and each of the country's 3,100 public safety bomb techs—which does not include the military's explosive ordnance disposal (EOD) technicians—is required to be recertified at HDS every three years.

“We have to provide the very best training available. This is a no-fail mission. Jeff Warren, director, Hazardous Devices School

At the facility's sprawling campus, training is provided in classrooms, explosives ranges, and in “villages” that include mock stores, churches, and apartment complexes that are designed to resemble the conditions bomb techs would face during life or death situations in the real world. In addition to certification and recertification programs, the school offers advance training in a variety of areas, including weapons of mass destruction and electronic and maritime countermeasures.

“The threat from terrorists and other criminals is ever changing,” Warren said, and now that the FBI has assumed primary leadership of the HDS, there is a greater responsibility on the Bureau to make sure the nation's public safety bomb techs are prepared for whatever they might face in real life. “We have to provide the very best training available,” he said. “This is a no-fail mission.”

Although yesterday's ceremony completed the transition of the HDS to the Bureau, McCabe pointed out that the Army will continue to play an important role in the school's mission, “and the FBI looks forward to our continued partnership with the Army and the team at Redstone.”
