LPD Officer Yates thwarts possible future theft while recovering stolen vehicle

The always working Loudon Police Department has done it again. Officer Jonathan Yates used his prior knowledge to stop a possible future theft. The officer stopped a vehicle when the vehicle was found to be stolen while the occupants were around a home the officer was familiar with and knew a vehicle should not be there.

 and lack of access to our own information.” “Cyber threats are too fast, too big, and too widespread for any of us to address them alone. -James B. Com-

ey, Director, FBI
 The public and private sector can help deter this behavior, said Comey, by reducing vulnerabilities, reducing the threat by holding accountable those who are responsible, and mitigating the damage.

The FBI Director also laid out the Bureau's five-part strategy to address cyber intrusions:

Focusing ourselves

better inside the FBI in terms of how we operate and who we hire;

Shrinking the world by clarifying investigative “lanes in the road” here at home and enhancing cooperation abroad;

Imposing costs on this kind of behavior by locking cyber criminals up and/or calling them out through incidents and sanctions;

Enhancing the “digital literacy” of state and local partners through training, equipment, and task forces to make them more effective; and

Working to improve collaboration with private sector entities, the primary targets of cyber intrusions but the majority of whom, according to Comey, don't turn to law enforcement when they're breached.

Comey also spoke about the impact of the advent of “ubiquitous strong encryption” on the work of law enforcement and urged the audience to “continue to engage in what is a very complicated and difficult subject.” This so-called Going Dark issue is a growing challenge to public safety and national security that has eroded law enforcement's ability to obtain electronic information and evidence with a court order or warrant.

Haywood

2015 report.

Some of the repeated findings include lease-purchase agreements that were not issued in compliance with state statutes, not following proper purchasing procedures, failing to control access to courthouse offices, and not accounting for certain road materials.

Seven of the 11 findings pertain to the Office of the County Mayor; however, the Offices of Solid Waste, Chief Administrative Highway Officer, Director of Schools and Trustee also received findings.

Audit findings indicate significant deficiencies and non-compliance with government standards within Haywood County government.

“Haywood County has a track record of receiving double-digit audit findings each year,” said Comptroller Justin P. Wilson. “While the majority of Tennessee counties are showing improvement, it is concerning to see a lack of progress in Haywood County. Audit findings are meant to be corrected.”
